The carts are made hitched in front of the cart and sometimes under the cart. When there are but one or two, they are hitched so that they walk right under the bed and between the wheels. Often the axle of the cart has an arch in it so that the dogs walk right in the arch. The dogs usually wear good leather collars, made in a harness shop, and the traces are

The picture is one made from a photograph taken in Brussels, Belgium. The milk is usually retailed by women. It is surprising to see some of the large loads the dogs draw. It is a common thing to see two men or women sitting upon the cart with a half-dozen cans in the back of the bed, and going along the street.

They have another very common method of doing work on their farms that we rarely see in the states-that is, with cattle. It is a common thing to see a man plow his beets or other crops with one ox or with a cow hitched to a shovel-plow. When they work an animal single they have a collar and harness, and a bridle with a bit that goes in the mouth, the same as we work a horse. Sometimes you see two animals hitched together-a cow and a bull, or two cows. To me it looks very much out of place to see two old milch cows hitched to a big load of wheat, but it is common here. These people here know what it is to work. They cut every bit of their grain with the hand sickle. They raise magnificent crops of everything. Everyand now says his fate is deserved. thing depends on manure, and nothing goes to waste.
